Mr. Mumford would like to know what makes you proud of Immingham. Both the town and the school. Are there any landmarks or traditions that you feel make Immingham special? Please let him know by sending him an email!

Ellen Wonnacott

I remember blank walls. Walls so blank I believed they were just paper. The window was open allowing the evening breeze to enter and blow the curtains lightly. It was accompanied by a sweet angelic voice singing a lullaby. I couldn't talk, it was cold. I was hooked up to a machine, however the name of which, I can't remember. I still don't understand why we did it, looking at my past when they were the ones in need. Or was it I was in need. All I can remember are people, dead people. All the people I ever lost but no one who is living. Why is this?

'Start over dear, do you remember what happened to you and why you were at the hospital?' A man said to me, his voice was therapeutic to me.

I did as he asked and started over, this is what he wrote as I told him what happened from memory.

Yoana Vasileva - Battle of Doiran

You may be wondering to yourself, 'What was the Battle of Doiran?' Realistically, you probably weren't but I'm here to tell you anyways as you may find it interesting.

Picture this, its 1917 and the UK is in the middle of the First World War, George Milne and 43,000 troops on one side whilst Vladimir Vazov had 30,000 men on the other side, at Lake Doiran located in the country now known as North Macedonia.

The battle started with the British troops attacking the Bulgarians but failing after underestimating their strength. After multiple attacks from the British each one resulted in a fail, so three English divisions, two Greek divisions, one Serbian military and one French military joined forces and were ready for a new attack against the Bulgarians.

Envision this, almost 10 days of 'unusual' gun attacks initiated by the British when finally the Bulgarian defences were broken and to ensure a British victory, the English released poisonous gas to ensure the Bulgarians death but they secretly had gas masks. Even after the British's attempt with poisonous gas, the Bulgarian defenders were expecting them for their next attack. The Bulgarian troops were prepared for the following attack by General Vladimir Vazov.

General Vazov was a Bulgarian man born on May 14 1868, he had many siblings including Bulgarian poet; Ivan Vazov. Due to General Vazov's preparations, every commander and troop knew their job which resulted in great communication strategy. This then inevitably led to a Bulgarian win even after the British's endeavour with another gas attack.

In the end, there were 14,000 dead British troops and 1,600 dead Bulgarian troops. Even though you may still be left with questions, I hope you learnt at least a little history on the Battle of Doiran. But before I leave you I wanted to talk about why I decided to write about something that may seem so random to you, the Battle of Doiran can be considered a great loss of the British which is something that isn't talked about much in history as anyone i've asked hasn't know anything about this battle. I think things like this should be taught more often as a country's loses are just as important as their wins.
